

Spectra's use of progressive frequency rolloff to all of its sectors except one full-range "line-source" causes effective rearward displacements of these sectors. This causes wave-model controlled distributions of midrange energy in a manner not achievable using mechanical array shaping. Note that choice of sector drive and physical location is able to create asymmetry in both the effective array shape and room dispersion at midrange frequencies.